Barbara had approached our client with the watch that had been the subject of a studio accident, having been dropped into a tin of vermilion paint. It was taken away on the basis that it would be cleaned and restored when time allowed. In the meantime Peter was involved in his gliding accident. On learning of Peter's death our vendor endeavoured to return the now clean and working watch to the family, but was advised that he might keep the watch as a memento in lieu of the bill. £800-1200
